

Mohammed Fazole Rabbee was a renowned cardiologist, a published medical researcher and the joint professor of Cardiology and Internal Medicine at Dhaka Medical College and Hospital.

Rabbee was born on 21 September 1932, in Pabna. His father was Afsaruddin Ahmad and mother Sufia Khatoon.

In 1948, he passed matriculation from Pabna Zilla School and I.Sc from Dhaka College in 1950. Afterwards, Rabbee went to Dhaka Medical College and finished his MBBS in 1955.

In March 1960, he earned an MRCP in both cardiology and internal medicine. Rabbee received these two post-graduate degrees in record time by 1962. In lieu of obtaining his MRCP from London, he worked at the Hammersmith Hospital. Upon graduation, he worked at Middlesex Hospital.

After Rabbee finished his studies, he returned to East Pakistan on 1 January 1963, where he became an associate professor of medicine at Dhaka Medical College, sooner promoted to Professor of cardiology, DMCH & was the youngest MRCP staff member to achieve this promotion in Dhaka Medical College at the age of 36. Rabbee also did research on medicine, and has had his research-based articles published in the British Medical Journal and The Lancet.

He was married to Jahan Ara Rabbee.

He was a man of science with a progressive philosophy.

In 1970 when the repression of East Pakistanis reached a peak, Professor Rabbee received the Pakistan best professor award which he refused to accept. In 1971, Both he and his wife became completely engaged in the liberation war. They helped and protected countless freedom fighters and their families from death and disaster.

On 15 December 1971, a group of Pak army with the help of the al-badr abducted him from his residence at Siddheswari and was brutally killed when the Bangladesh Liberation War was ending.

